

Dear ...

I am very sorry I hurt you so deeply and you feel so much hate towards me.

I have only wanted the best for you and to show my love for you the best I knew how. I hate myself for failing failed so inadequately and causing you.

I love you very much and have felt a closeness to you that I have never had before.
Sharing of things I have never been able to do before but even at this I've failed to gain your trust.

Because I've not been honest with Kathy you brand me as being dishonest with you, the one person I thought I had an open relationship with. I've never been able to open up with anyone before meeting you, and now I've failed with someone I love very much.

I am very unhappy in my present state and was looking forward to the day when we could build an air relationship and pursue the interests we have. Perhaps this is impossible if I've done things for you not to have trust in me no matter what the circumstances.

In my love for you, I've trusted you and believed in you. I respect you and I do believe you love me. You are wonderful for me, you make me feel good, you rejuvenate me, you make me feel loved. I have tried to return that love in as many ways as I possibly know how.

To Phoenix I told you
I needed to call home. I'm sorry that upset you. I was trying to be open. Several months ago I had promised to attend the Kense Children's fund raiser. Earlier this week I told Kathy I did not want to go, but I got so much heat and argument I went. I know I felt everyone was beating on me and I didn't want to talk. I truly apologize.

I failed to realize what this must to you. I ask you to forgive me and give me a chance. I promise to be open and honest with you and with me.

. I love you. Brian
